Pedro Suarez Duran

The promise of youth.

Rocamadre concentrates on crafting wines from mountain-grown grapes. Viticulture and winemaking are parts of the same process, one that begins in the vineyards and finishes in the winery, all the while respecting natural processes and the environment.

Rocamadre wines are fresh and pure, made with a sense of where they are from. The wines reflect the mountains, the sun, the snow and the stones in every bottle.

PARAJE ALTAMIRA IS THE HOME OF ROCAMADRE

Located in the Uco Valley, in the foothills of the Andes Mountains at 1,100 metres above sea level, it has a continental climate, intense cold spells and year-round wide thermal amplitude. Bright sunlight and scarce rain generate a very healthy environment for making wine. The soils are alluvial, with a sandy-loam topsoil covering calcium carbonate-rich (limestone) soils.
